

#capturingtheday – Week 14 Roundup

It's the final countdown!

(Love a bit of Europe I do!)

Only 2 weeks until the big fat man visits and I still haven't done ANYTHING. Literally, I have done nothing. This week is the week, except my husband still hasn't given me any ideas and I am feeling very uninspired at the moment. Ideas on a postcard please!

Sickness has been rife in our household this week and all 3 kids have taken it in turns to tag team with the puke-fest. It's been awful and to top things off, the eldest has it back again. Yep, he has had it twice in a week. Lord have mercy and pass me the Gin. I might bathe in it to disinfect myself...

So, onto this weeks roundup. We are now 14 weeks in (14!!!! We can't believe it!) and we have accumulated almost 3500 images now. All of them are wonderful, truly, we really mean that, and we are so happy that lots of you join in by tagging #capturingtheday.

So, without further ado, here are my 4 choices for #capturingtheday...

An absolutely gorgeous mum-to-be, some incredible fancy dress friends, a beautiful hug between a Nan and her Grandchildren and a frosty morning down by the water...

#capturingtheday

All photos are welcome.

Baking, crafts, days out, sunsets, tantrums, rain, crappy Christmas presents, poonamis. well earned nights out for the parents, whatever it is you've captured during the week.

To finish, here is my favourite photo of the week by my lovely friend Yvonne over at Double the Monkey Business...

Yvonne and her little chaps have been getting all crafty this week and put some life back into some old Baubles. The boys painted them, let them dry and then hung them on the tree. A lovely way of making a memento each year. I absolutely love hanging decorations with a story behind them on the tree, even if it doesn't make it 'Pinterest perfect'. It's all about making memories.

See you all next week for our week 15 roundup!
