It's the second week of January and our #capturingtheday roundup's are back!

Happy New Year everyone!

Despite not doing a roundup for a few weeks as part of our Christmas break, myself and Yvonne have still been keeping our beady eyes on Instagram and we have been so overwhelmed at everyone's photos! Christmas present frenzies, family walks, baking, drinks, food, you name it, it was shared with us. We hope you all had a wonderful time with your loved ones.

So, onto the new year! I wonder what 2017 has in store for us all?

Time to write a new chapter and make some new memories.

I had a lovely Christmas but ate too much, drank too much and neglected my washing pile too long. This week has been a week for 'catching up' and sadly not in the coffee, cake and chat with a friend sense. Cleaning, washing, hoovering, household admin...all very rock and roll.

One highlight this weekend however has been mine and hubby's 5th Wedding Anniversary. We got married after we had our first two kiddies (outrageous I know) and so despite being together for 12 years, we have only been 'legally wed' for 5 of them.

We used it as an excuse to have a lovely child-free day walking around the British Museum and going for some scrummy dinner (with a few cocktails as well obviously). It was a really super day.

Because we had a few weeks off, we couldn't choose just 4 photos each, and seen as we make the rules around here, we chose 8 each this week. You're all just too talented!

So, without further ado, here are my chosen images for this weeks #capturingtheday roundup...

All photos are welcome.

Baking, crafts, days out, sunsets, tantrums, rain, crappy Christmas presents, poonamis. well earned nights out for the parents, whatever it is you've captured during the week.

My favourite photo from my Right hand Gal, Yvonne, over at Double the Monkey Business is this beauty...

I do love an old door and her little lads look so tiny next to it. Precious little chaps.

Happy New Year my lovely – 2017 will be the year we finally get to catch up and I cannot wait! Gin and giggles await!
